

Advocacy Policy

Definition: In order for persons with a disability to fulfill all of their rights, it can be helpful to access advocacy services to speak on your behalf or to support your voice to be heard. Advocacy is a service provided by an independent person / service provider to ensure a person's rights are respected and upheld.

Our Commitment to Our Clients: The mission of Elements Assessment Behaviour Consulting (EABC) is to empower others to reach their personal goals and experience positive changes in their life through person-centred care; where kindness, authenticity, safety, inclusion, proactive engagement and specialist knowledge are at the core of all of our relationships and services.

Context: The NDIS Quality and Safeguards Commission is an independent agency established to improve the quality and safety of NDIS supports and services. The NDIS Commission regulates service providers, such as EABC, and handles complaints about the quality and safety of NDIS supports and services. The NDIS Commission has developed a set of practice standards for agencies that want to continue to provide services under NDIS. Part of those standards includes information about how to uphold a person with a disability's rights and responsibilities, this includes their access to advocacy.

Our Advocacy Commitment

EABC is committed to ensure that any person receiving behavioural support from us is provided with information and support to access advocacy. We will proactively examine the vulnerability of all our clients and promote advocacy from the outset of our service delivery.
